Once you have your passport in hand, you will need to decide if you are the kind of person who wants to have a travel companion or if you prefer the freedom solo travel provides. You may want to consider the reason you are taking the trip in the first place. Do you want to see the sights and immerse yourself in culture and history or do you want to simply shed the stress of your normal work atmosphere? Are you an adventure junkie who wants to be able to change direction at a moments notice? Who you are and what you want to do will assist you in deciding whether to travel alone or with a friend.

If you decide you are the solo travel type, you may want to consider a cruise. Cruising has enjoyed increased popularity, among solo and family travelers alike. There are, however, specific Singles Cruises that are put together to meet the needs and desires of travelers who seek the adventure of meeting that special someone in the midst of all that a cruise offers. Night clubs, professional entertainment, delicious food and luxurious accommodations are all part of this type of all-inclusive travel. Land tours and activities are also offered and can be a great way to meet new people.

Depending on your likes and abilities, there are many places that fit well into a solo vacation. If you see yourself relaxing on a beautiful beach or by a resort pool enjoying a Margarita, you may want to consider the Caribbean islands. If snow skiing is your passion, you many want to consider a ski resort in Italy or Switzerland. Adventure and enjoyment await you on the snow covered slopes and in the quaint towns and villages. If underwater sports interest you, you may want to journey to the Great Barrier Reef off the coast of Australia or enjoy the Red Sea off the coast of Egypt.

Solo travel has its up side and down side but so does group travel. In a group, there is always someone to share the experience with but there is also some else who will want their wishes to be considered. It all depends on your own personality. Some people tend to be quite and reserved and enjoy solitude and independence. Others cant imagine being alone whether or not they are on vacation. Some would love the opportunity to travel unencumbered and available to meet new and interesting people while others would be fearful of meeting new people in a strange place. You and you alone can decide which description best fits who you are and what kind of travel experience would be best for your own pleasure.
